several pharmaceutical companies started searching in the early 1970s for a topical beta-blocker that could be useful for treating glaucoma

when you don't want your gun to go bang, but you are too stupid to keep your booger-hook off the trigger and it goes "bang", it's called a negligent discharge.

internet, and the effect of technology," says Robert Weisberg, a professor of criminal law at Stanford either a bootlicker or bootowner, no inbetween, one or the other the data from the cohort indicated a sharp reduction in HIV transmission among people who inject drugs (PWID) between 1986 and 2000, with sporadic new HIV cases detected in 2005 and 2008

thanks for your time so much for the professional and sensible guide